

Water Prayers

And this morning I awoke to rain, which makes it's own rhythm on the window, and the world is full of these rhythms, rhythm of water, rhythm of the heart, which sounds like an underwater pump, the lub-dub of all it knows, which is making all I know possible, and on the roof rain falls and turns to hail, then snow, then rain again, running down the shingles to the gutter, the gathering up that makes rivers and lakes and oceans, from cloud to drop to torrent, how nothing is lost.
